

Feedback from parents of children on the SEN Register - December 2022

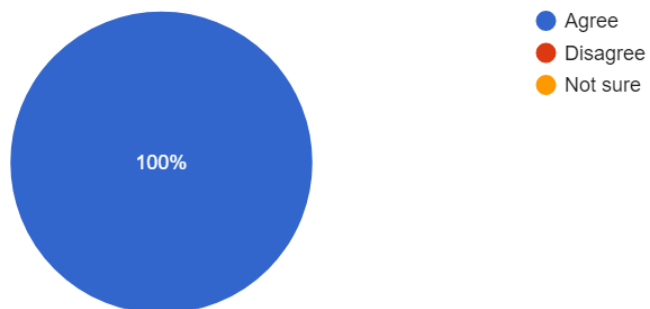

The school has a good understanding of my child's needs

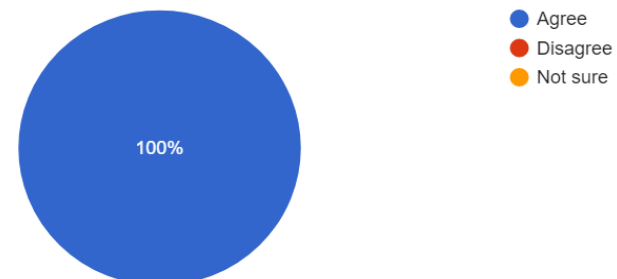

I know what support is in place to ensure my child makes progress

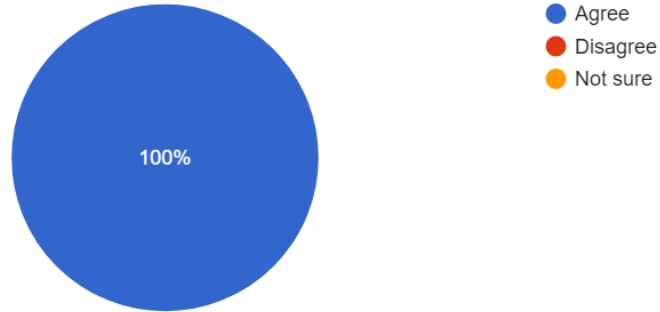

I know who the SENCo (Inclusion Lead) is and how to contact them

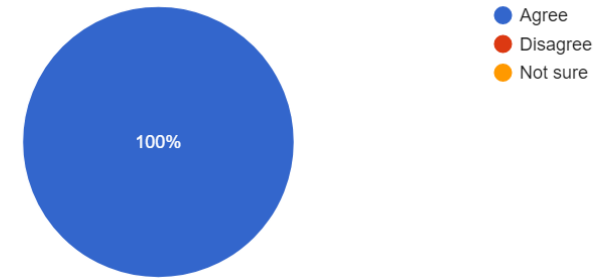

The class teachers are able to support me with any questions I may have relating to my child's SEN journey (including directing to INCo where appropriate)

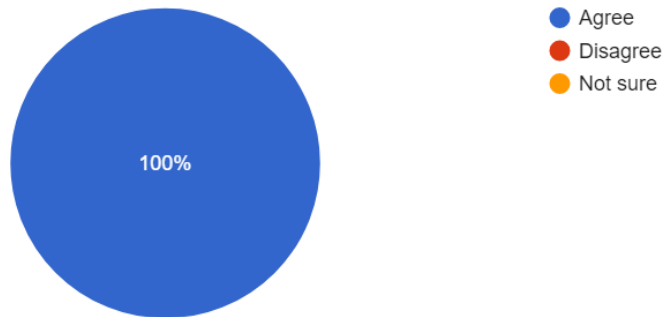

When I have concerns regarding my child, they are addressed quickly and effectively

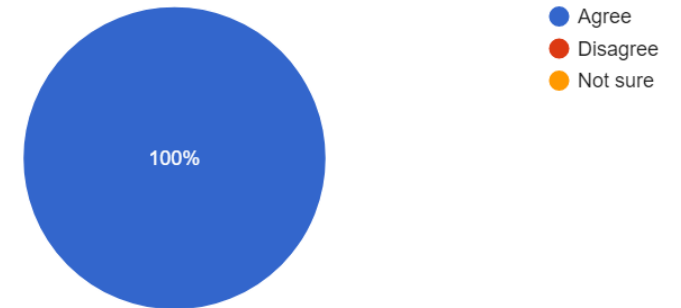

Where applicable, the school has directed me towards additional services and agencies to help me support my child (GP, Speech & Language, Advisory Teachers, Family Centre etc)

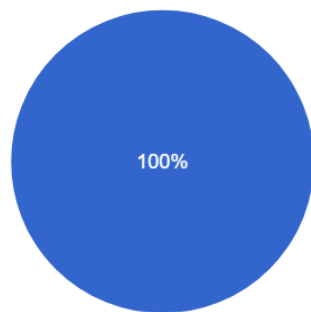

I have received a copy of my child's termly Individual Provision Plan from their class teacher

I feel I am kept up to date with events in my child's learning journey (visits from agencies, work in class, referrals etc)

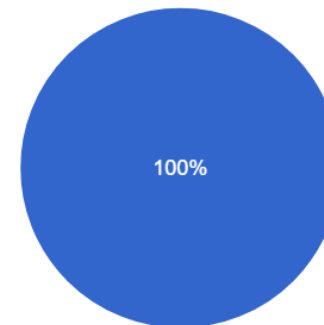

I have accessed the Inclusion section of the school website (including SEN information)

The best thing about the SEN provision at F&B is...

The whole school approach, for the inco, headteacher, teachers and assistants.

That the focus is personalised to my child's needs. We have seen remarkable progress from when [redacted] started at F&B in Reception last year to how he is now in Year 1 and that is definitely down to the help and support he's received from Mrs Jones as well as everyone else in the school.

Something that F&B can work on with regards to their SEN provision is...

Ask teachers not to pull up children in front of their peers if there is a sensory behaviour they have noticed in the classroom. group setting. Pull to Ince side later.

I would like to expand on some of the answers above / I have the following further comments to make...

Approachable inco with practical short term and long term approaches. School is proactive at finding services like Sam Amos rather than waiting for government services. Inco is supportive to parents with government processes by writing letters to GPs etc to support parental requests. The sen provision is fantastic and I am so glad that you are here to help the children!
